Professor Dudziak, a legal historian whose research focuses on international approaches to legal history and the impact of war on American democracy, received her AB from Yale University. Prior to joining USC Law in 1998, she clerked for Judge Sam J. Ervin, III, of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals. She then worked in the field of education at numerous universities, including the University of Iowa School of Law, Princeton University, Harvard Law School, and the University of Maryland School of Law.

An accomplished author, she has written extensively about the impact of foreign affairs on civil rights policy during the Cold War and other topics in 20th-century American legal history. Her books include Exporting American Dreams: Thurgood Marshall’s African Journey (2008); Cold War Civil Rights: Race and the Image of American Democracy (2000). She is also the editor of September 11 in History: A Watershed Moment? (2003); and the co-editor (with Leti Volpp) of Legal Borderlands: Law and the Construction of American Borders, a special issue of American Quarterly (September 2005), reissued in March 2006. Her articles on civil rights history and 20th-century constitutional history have appeared in numerous law reviews and other journals.

Thurgood Marshall became a living icon of civil rights when he argued Brown v. Board of Education before the Supreme Court in 1954. Six years later, he was at a crossroads. A rising generation of activists were making sit-ins and demonstrations rather than lawsuits the hallmark of the civil rights movement. What role, he wondered, could he now play? When in 1960 Kenyan independence leaders asked him to help write their constitution, Marshall threw himself into their cause. Here was a new arena in which law might serve as the tool with which to forge a just society.
