COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Government agencies increasingly regulate the marketplace, health and safety, and provide basic services. This course explores the constitutional powers and limitations on agency action, judicial review of agencies, and the procedures with which agencies must comply in regulating or providing benefits.

SPECIAL NOTE:

Laptop and Electronic Device Policy: You may only use your laptop at the beginning and end of class. You may not use your cell phone or any other electronic device during class; in other words, you may not text, e-mail, chat, read, check the internet or play games during class. I will tell you the precise times when you may use your laptop. I will try to summarize and review the class material at the beginning and end of class. I will answer questions at these times. During the middle of class session, I want your attention on the class discussion and not on your laptops so you may not use them. I am experimenting with this laptop policy for the first time and may modify it in the interest of improving your learning experience. I will listen to any complaints, but complaining alone will not convince me to change the policy unless you provide solid evidence and reasons for any proposed modifications of the policy.
