COURSE DESCRIPTION:
Most lawyers agree that practicing law would be much simpler without (autonomous) clients. But then, practice would be without purpose: whom would we represent? This intensive workshop course focuses on the realities of working with clients, from the initial lawyer-client interview through the challenges of counseling the fully informed client toward wise and ethical decision-making. Short exercises, presentations, video, and role simulations will focus upon how to communicate legal concepts, conduct interest-based inquiry and advice, work with client emotion and psychology, and introduce basic risk analysis. We will touch upon effective use of voice, gesture, and body language in the lawyer-client counseling context. Finally, we will address the most difficult counseling challenge: how to give a client bad news while maintaining client rapport, trust, and confidence. After the workshop, students will complete an individual final counseling skills exercise. The instruction and simulations will be set in legal dispute contexts.

SPECIAL NOTES:
See information about 2L required courses on the College website.

3Ls will not be permitted to participate in the lottery for this class but may take the class if seats remain after the lottery.

A special drop date applies to this class. Students admitted to this class who later decide to drop it must do so by Friday, January 3, 2014. If you MUST drop the course after January 3 due to unavoidable and unforeseen circumstances - please email directly to Professor Aaron (Marjorie.aaron@uc.edu) with a cc to Registrar, Charlene Carpenter (Charlene.carpenter@uc.edu) so that we can notify students remaining on the waiting list.

SHORT COURSE: Each workshop day will include an hour break for lunch and a fifteen minute break in the morning and the afternoon. Individual Final Counseling Skills Exercise (30 minute) sessions and a one hour collective wrap-up class will be scheduled early in the spring semester. A student may not take any other short course during this workshop week.
