COURSE DESCRIPTION:
In this course, students consider the lawyer-client relationship in the context of realistic scenarios, examining the basic strategies and skills a lawyer must master in the lawyer-client relationship. Students will practice and demonstrate the skills of effective client communication and practice management. The instruction and simulations will be set in the business transaction context.

SPECIAL NOTES:
This is a required course that must be taken in the second year. You may take it in this workshop format or take the semester-long course, both offered in the spring semester. Some students have already taken this class in the fall semester. Students who participate in the Ohio Innocence Project course sequence in the second year will have met the Client Counseling Requirement and are not required to take this course. These students, along with 3Ls, will be permitted to take the Client Counseling course only if seats remain after students are placed in the sections of the course who must take it.

SHORT COURSE: This class will meet on a condensed schedule during the week of January 13–17. Skills assignments and wrap-up classes will be scheduled during the spring semester. A student may only take 1 short course during this week. Meeting times and places during this week will be announced on the website.
A special drop date applies to this class. Students admitted to this class who later decide to drop it must do so by Monday, January 3, 2014. If you MUST drop the course after January 3 due to unavoidable and unforeseen circumstances, please email directly to Professor Mangan with a cc to Registrar Charlene Carpenter so that we can notify students remaining on the waiting list.
