COURSE DESCRIPTION:
This course examines the transactional aspects of health care law. The course first considers how health care services rendered by physicians and institutional providers are reimbursed. The course provides the students with an understanding of the complex interaction of private insurance, the federal Medicare program, and the state/federal Medicaid program. The course also provides an analysis of various statutes and other sources that regulate physician and provider conflicts of interests, including the fraud and abuse amendments, Stark II and other federal laws. In addition, the course provides a overview of the rapidly evolving organizational forms through which health care is delivered, such as the formation of integrated delivery systems, physician practice management companies and physician practice acquisitions. All issues will be reviewed from a transactional lawyer’s perspective and case studies are sued to identity relevant legislative issues and to arrive at practical legal solutions.
